Following in the footsteps of her dad, Cory Fisk was first introduced to construction, running ginnies in the summers between college. A graduate of Texas A & M University with a Master of Arts in Curriculum & Instruction, Cory is the Department Head Professor of Construction Management Technology at a local Community College, and has been a leader in Construction Management Education for the past 18 years. Although Cory's background of over 20 years of Project & Construction Management experience with companies like Heery International, Fluor Daniel, & Kitchell CEM provides a great background for training the industry's Construction Managers, she is also a strong entrepreneurial business owner with a Class A General Engineering Contractor's License. Cory's unique, innovative problem solving skills along with her team approach & skill building awareness philosophy has bode well for many Leadership Training Programs and now as part of GLA's Facilitation Team. As a respected workforce expert, Cory leans on lessons learned through her diverse work experience in Land Development, Road Construction, Correctional Facilities, College/High School & Middle School Educational Facilities, Tribal Agency Facility Management & New Construction, & private consultation for custom home design. A driven executive leader with a focus on Team Development, Cory currently serves on both Finance & Land Management Boards, Chairman of Parks & Recreation Commission and a Board Member of a Tri-County Workforce Board. A critical thinker,
